We have already perused a copy of a circular and a series of questions addressed by Lord IDDE. stron to many of our leading financial and commercial authorities preparatory to the examination of witnesses on the subject of the supply of, and the demand for, the precious metals which are used as standards of value. The result of this inquiry, as well as the outcome of an important circular addressed to the members of Parliament by the Bi-metallic League, will, we venture to think, astonish the Times, and utterly shatter any faith the public may have in its erroneous and superficial currency dogmas." We are glad to have this assurance that the Royal Commission has specifically directed its atten-. tion to this important question of the currency. An importial and exhaustive inquiry by a ca able body cannot fail to throw's welcome and much needed light on the subject, and to dissipate much of the obscurity and many kow, left Shanghai for his post by the Kiangfoo of the fallacies which surround it. One of the chief of these fallacies, we think, is the popular supposition that silver using countries have been greatly benefited by the decline in the value of that metal. The N. C. Daily News, for instance, somewhat inconsequently concludes an article on the trade in state of Pahang. He is accompanied by Bir sundries in China with the remark that - Hugh Low and the Resident of Belangor. At last (says Kuhlow & German Trade Review) the Government's scheme for the establishment in Berlin of a College for Oriental Languages is published. It is difficult to overestimate the value of an institution of this kind, especially in the present day, when our international relationships are so extensive. The project can hardly be called a new one. For five years, at any rate, it has been before the public. Yot while the desirability of having a seminary in which Oriental determined to give the institution the protection and support of the State, attaching it to the Friedrich Withelm University and endowing it with a liberal grant of money. There is no telling how important the service rendered by the new Oriental College may be. It is constantly happening that men have to be sent to diplomatic, consular, and other posts in the East spoken in the country of their adoption. This cannot be said to be their fault, for the facilities tor acquiring a knowledge of Eastern languages have hitherto been very limited. Still, the disadvantages are all the same very serious. The language has to be learned on the spot, and daring the time thus used official duties cannot in the nature of the case be performed with perfect success. With the establishment of the new, college this state of things will be largely remedied. It will be possible to send out to China, Japan, Turkey, Persia, India, and Arabia men the Gladstonites were sanguine of success, knowing already a good deal of the languages which will for the future be familiar to their ears. The public interest will thus rain in an appreciable degree. LATEST TELEGRAMS.

In December of the same year M. Ferry informed Lord Lyons that he had transmitted the certificate to the French consular agents in the United Kingdom, and had invited them to adopt it as model for all documents of the kind which they might be called upon to deliver.

"Wine, Beer, Spirit," is the title of a genre painting by the Munich artist P. Grützner, which is intended for the Berlin Jubilee Exhibition. The painting is strictly a social picture. as it represents persons out of three different grades of society whose behaviour at drinking allows one to judge of their respective degrees of education and refinement. The beer drinkers are sipping their nectar in the court of a brewhouse, their heads untroubled by philosophic thoughts, but finding their summum bonum in the pleasures of the glass. The central picture who are taking stock of the morits of a new wine, while a young monk is reading out of some old classic a song of praise to wine. The spirit drowning their sorrows in fire-water. The entire work is unique in character and it will donotless attract a good deal of attention when hung.

Lawn tennis comes as a boon and a blessing to. men and women, as the missing link between cricket and croquet, in which both sexes could indulge and really like it. But it is only now that an equally interesting and enjoyable pastime has been invented for indoors. It has been already tried with great success at a "mixed" party in America: and the best of it is that the apparatus is so inexpensive as to "suit all pocket." The new amusement is "Bubblo-blowing," and in the game the ladies are pitted against the gentlemen. In the trial game referred to the softer sex blew the largest bubbles, and so came off victorious. One expert blew a bubble that measured 39 inches in circumference. It is not mentioned how they measured it. It is understood that the defeated males are practising in private, so the ladies had better look to their laurels. Except perhaps in Parliament, bubble-blowing has attained little popularity in this country among adults as yet. But, doubtless, we shall have it now.

It has been more frequently noted, as a sign of times, that music-half "artists" are becoming "professionals" than that players of cousiderable standing are deserting the "legitimate" for the "halls." There is so much going and coming between the two callings that the line of division would seem to be breaking down. The player gets the better kind of fame, but the "artist" makes most money. There is a juggler on the music-hall stage at present whose weekly salary is £80. As a rule, the "artist" plays in several music halls a night, which in most case: accounts for the largeness of his-wage. This particular juggler, however, only performs at the Pavilion Music Hall, so that he is fairly well paid. A man who gets inside a donkey's skin goes through some ridiculous antics is such a favourite that he is probably paid as much. From £30 to £50 a week is earned by half a dozen music-hall performers. On the other hand the most popular of all music-hall singers is now | Tt. 17 playing at one of the London theatres, and it is said that he only makes about £2,000 a year. Evidently it requires some self-denial to give up the music-halls for the stage.

In his "Voyage au tour de ma Chambre," De Maistre discusses the very curious phenomenor of the independence of the mind and the body He tells us how, in a fit of absent-mindedness, he often drew on his stockings wrong side out, and had to be reminded by his invaluable servant Joannetti of his mistake. Many readers will call to mind experience of their own of a similar nature. It seems guite common to put one's watchkey to one's par to ascertain if it is going; and many people are in the habit of winding their watches; and three minutes after pausing to wonder whether they have done so or Bolinso 29.78 | 81 (63 | WWW) $ (0 | Who has not heard of the philosopher who boiled his watch while he calmly held the egg in his hand to note the time! Or of the equally erudite man of science, who having peeled the apple, threw the apple itself over a cliff, and then | Windi-) discovered that the rind alone remained! Another individual had the habit—not such a very uncommon one of forgetting his own name at nwkward moments. One day he presented himself at the Post Office for letters, when, much to his disgust, he could not think of his name. He turned sadly homewards, racking his brains in the vain endeavour to discover who he was. Suddenly a friend accosted him. " How, are you, Mr. Brown?"-"Brown. Brown. I have it!" cried the absent-minded one; and leaving his astonished friend, he rushed back to the post office to get his letters. Sometimes absence of mind produces very ludicrous effects. A student on leaving his rooms one afternoon to take a stroll in the fashionable street in a university town, suddenly remembered that his fire needed coals, and returned to replenish it. On issuing from his lodging the second time, he was surprised to see people looking at him amusingly. Presently some ragamuffins at a street corner began to make audible remarks. On looking down, he discovered to his horror that he was serenely carrying the fire-tongs in place of his umbrells! One day an English savent wrote two letters one to a business house in London. the other ton friend in Paris. In stamping them at the post office, he placed the penny stamp on the letter for Paris, and the other on the business letter. Remarking to the post office clerk that he would correct the error, he changed the address! It was not till after he had posted the letters that he understood why the clerk had not been more impressed with his brilliant idea.

UNWOMANLY CONDUCT. " Miranda," in the Lady's Pictorial, save-" Female attendance-I will use neither the word woman nor lady-at the trial of public scandal. The idea of any human being, especially of our sex, attending a trial the details of which must have been hideous, and sitting quietly down to witness the moral vivisection of an unhappy woman, seems to me almost to unsex those who were present. The horrible creatures who in ancient Rome waited around the arena, and by a motion of the thumb indicate to the gladiators whether instant murder should or should not be perpetrated, were, many of them, almost too vile to be mentioned in modern times; they had, however, the excuse of living in a violent and licentious age. The fashionably-dressed and callous beings, however, who crushed and the Bartlett trial have no such excuse. One account I read spoke of the crowds congregated in the galleries of the court working embroidery, idly chatting, even enjoying their lunches, while the prisoner in the dock was standing practically within touch of an awful fate. If I had the power and it could be done, I would publish, and thus publicly NETH DOUGLAS ADAMS, and JAMES point, naturally wish to let the world know Canton, Macao, and Foochow, and in London. that they had graced the court with their presence on the occasion to which I refer. and that from day to day they perseveringly sat out the proceedings."

THE UGLY CITIES. AND BIG RIVERS OF AMERICA.

"Yet dreary the prairies are, and indeed most American scenery is dreary after you have passed the Rocky Mountains. Man has done nothing to give it any human features. He has developed the product TRY IT. tiveness of the earth. He has built mushroom towns upon it, and overspread it with a meshwork of railways. But man does not HAS. live by bread alone, and there was little grand that I could see in this journey, or indeed have ever seen (with one or two exceptions) anywhere in the United States, except the indomitable energy of the Americans themselves. I found only a lightly undulating country, generally open and untimbered, reclaimed and cultivated, and bearing crops at harvest time, but crops sown and reaped by machines; and at intervals the contractor-built congregations of streets of brick and corrugated iron, called towns or cities, which have made hideous so much of ourown England. Picturesqueness of nature, grace, or dignity, in the works of man are alike absent. The forest trees are small and insignificant. I speak of the east of the Rocky Mountains. The rivers! Yes, the Missouri and the Mississippi are grand rivers, if bigness makes grandeur. The mighty volume of their waters rolls on, carrying with it the rainfall of an enormous continent; but their turbid and yellow streams, fringed with unwholesome pineswamps, suggest only to the imagination that they are gigantic drains. It was the end of April, almost May, when I passed through, yet winter had not relaxed its bitter grasp. I had not seen a green leaf, scarcely a green blade of grass, since we left, he Salt Lake. It must be with the Eastern and Middle States as they say of Castile, nueve meses del Invierno y tres del OOD DOUBLE BARRELED GUNS Inflerno (nine months of winter and three of in Cases Complete, RIFLES, REVOLVERS, Winter is long and barsh; summer CARTRIDGES, and SHOT, &c., &c., &c. is brief and burning. Perhaps my impressions were coloured by the contrast with the colonies which I had left. California is lovely, as Australia or New Zealand; but omitting California, which never belonged | CABBAGE in Jars. to us, I could not help saying to myself, that although Oceana no longer included the American provinces, she had yot within the circuit of her empire the fairest portion of the late discovered world."-Mr. Froude's

AN ANCIENT BRITISH VESSEL. A discovery has just been made at Brigg HOCKS, BURGUNDY.

" Ocean."

which has aroused considerable interest BRANDY, WHISKIES, ALE, STOUT. among antiquarians. While engaged in exca. MACHINERY, LAWN MOWERS. yating at the gasworks some workmen came upon a large boat embedded in the clay some three or four feet below the surface. On the boat being bared it was found to be 48ft, long, 4ft, 4in, wide, and 2ft. 9in, deep. It is undoubtedly of very accient construction, being cut of a solid piece of oak. As a monument of the labours of the early inhabitants of this country the vessel is unique. When two or three feet of the soil and marine warp had been excavated the head of the vessel presented itself. It was not known to beother than a piece of oak, and was consequently damaged to some slight extenty it was followed up, and found to be a boat, whereon careful excavation ensued. The vessel lay at right angles to and only a few yards from the river Ancholme, which discharges itself into the Humber at Ferriby Sluice, and, as the stern was considerably lower than the head, it has the appearance of being stranded or beached on the bank of the river, where it must have sunk into the soft silk, oose, or marine warp, which, rising by degrees, wholly enveloped it. It is quite clear that the upper part was never exposed to the weather, or it would have perished, and the lower part only, as has been the case in other discoveries, would have alone been preserved. The measurements indicate an enormous tree; but they they refer to the inside, or to the hold, dug out of the trunk of the tree. As for the tree itself, there is no tree growing in England to-day that i its equal. The straight, even growth and the enormous length of the trunk before any branches present themselves imply that it THE grew in some forest or soil highly favourable to its development. The diameter at the butt is about 5ft. Sin.; at the first branch. which was nearly 50ft; above the ground, it is about 4ft. 9in., and throughout this length it is as straight and uniform as if turned in a lathe. These figures represent the tree after being divested of its bark and sapwood, which combined would be four to six inches in thickness. The trunk of this tree, measured over the bark, contained between 900 and 1,000 cubic feet, and when dressed for converting into this contained 700 cubic feet. The log was flattened on the top for " digging which has been performed in a very workmanlike manner with the axe or adze. The head or prow is rounded off somewhat blunt and gives one the impression of its being used as a ram. The stern end is sloped or bevelled, the excavation being carried through, and a plank end fitted in, the plank being fitted into the grooves wrought in the inside face of the vessel. As this plank end of the vessel was fixed in a perpendicular position, it follows that the sides, being sloped or bevelled, projected some distance beyond. These projections beyond the stern boards have the appearance of brackets intended to support a raised deck or seat. Towards A

the top edges there are large holes pierced through the wood, which have apparently, been laced through with ropes or cords to bind in the sides and press them to the plank ends. . Along the sides of the vessel towards the centre, there are other holes, too small and square through the wood to have been used by oars. The floor of the boat is upwards of 40ft. long and 4ft, wide. perfectly flat and level, and without any signs of a most being fixed therein. The sides are hewn quite perpendicular, and towards the starn there are some brackets left in the solid wood as if to support the ends of a seat. There is a bollow at the Mrs. Butlett assumed the dimensions of a head as if for a bowsprit, and near to it was a piece of crooked oak somewhat partaking in shape of an elephant's tusk. Nothing has been found in the boat, except some pieces of Scotch fir, but near to it were some curious
